Line-item veto bill gets OK after legacy of failed attempts

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — In a dramatic fit of purse-string power, President Clinton signed a line-item bill sought by presidents since James S. Grant. He promised unprecedented scrutiny of "the dark corners of the federal budget."

Opponents accused Congress of surrendering a precious piece of its constitutional prerogative to spend people's money. Federal employees immediately filed a court challenge.

Clipping his hat to Republican and Democratic predecessors, Clinton sought four pens used in Tuesday's signing and dispatched them to former Presidents Reagan, Ford, Carter and Bush — all of whom had pleaded for the power to slash specific provisions from spending bills.

Their successors will be able to use this power that they long sought to eliminate waste from the federal budget, said Clinton, who won't be able to use the line-item veto unless re-elected.

The bipartisan bill will be a fixture in the presidential election, with Clinton and Senate Majority Leader Dole both claiming credit. "It will help put Washington on a pork-barrel diet," Dole said Tuesday.

Clinton, who seldom used the line-item veto as Arkansas' governor, said that 43 of the nation's 50 governors can carve away at budget items. "They have used it well and without any upsetting of the constitutional framework," Clinton said.

Under the new law, presidents can cancel spending bills and — within 60 days — cancel specific items, including appropriations, narrowly targeted tax breaks covering 100 or fewer people and new or expanded entitlements.

It does away with a requirement, in place since the nation's founding, that a president must approve or reject legislation in its entirety.

Congress still gets the last word on spending: A line-item veto can be overridden by a two-thirds vote of both houses of Congress.

The bill, part of the GOP "Contract With America," passed Congress easily despite a rich history of failure.

Congress has jealously guarded its spending powers, turning back more than 200 attempts in the last 120 years to give presidents a line-item veto.

Rep. Marge Roukema, R-N.J., said the bill will prompt "more partisan bickering, legislative horse-trading and even more pork-barrel spending."

Bomb victims' names found in cabin

Kaczynski also had contact with at least 4 targets

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The names of Unabomber victims have turned up in Theodore Kaczynski's writings found at his wilderness cabin, and federal agents have discovered possible casual contacts between him and four victims, officials said Tuesday.

These were among a mounting list of apparent links between the reclusive, 53-year-old former mathematics professor and the Unabomber's 18-year string of bombings as investigators settled into what one called "a painstaking, methodical investigation that will take weeks."

"There is a general consistency in the written plans and the physical evidence found at the cabin scene, with the Unabomber's work," said a law enforcement official in Washington, commenting only on condition of anonymity.

"The names of some victims were found in the cabin," he said, declining to disclose them or in what form they appeared.

A second federal law enforcement official said the notebooks that Kaczynski wrote by hand and some printed material at the cabin near Lincoln, Mont., do mention some of the Unabomber's victims but also include references to many other individuals and organizations.

Most of the references are handwritten but none specifically mentions Unabomber victims as targets, the second official said. "The idea that there is a list of victims or targets is not correct."

Elsewhere, federal agents scouring the Unabomber's suspected haunts and target sites across the nation have turned up evidence that Kaczynski may have actually crossed paths with four Unabomber victims, according to a federal law enforcement source. Three people have been killed and 23 injured in nine states in Unabomber attacks.

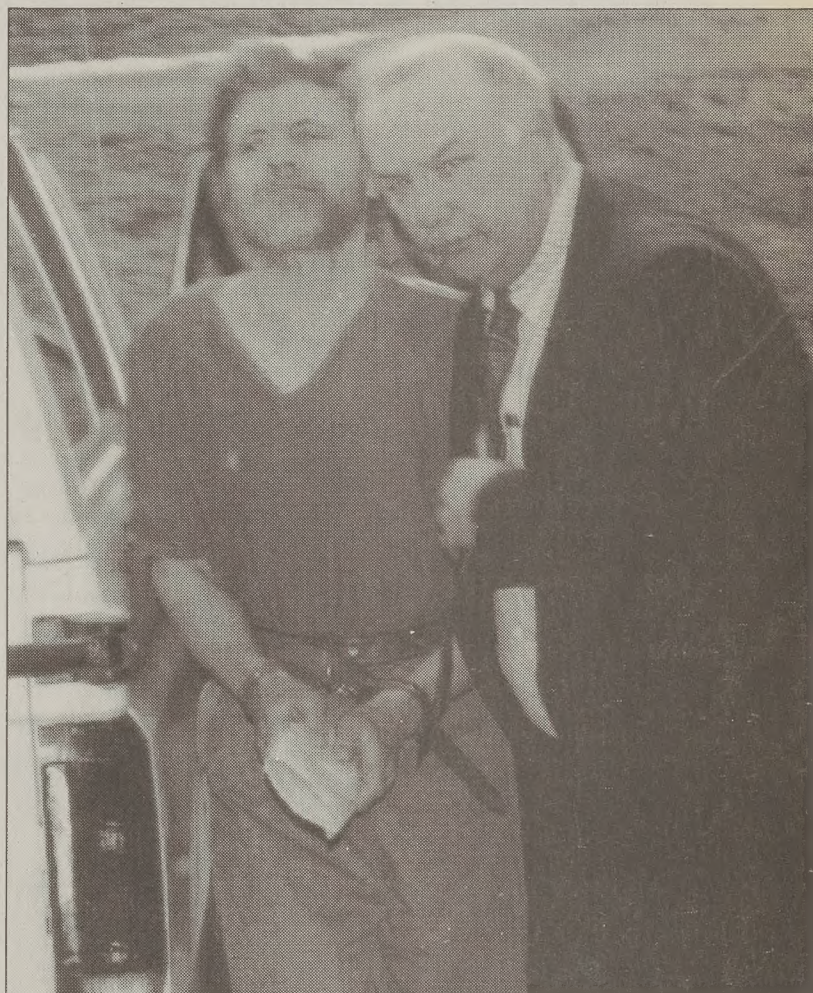

Those interviewed so far remember mostly hallway encounters or casual contact with Kaczynski rather than any close association, the source said. Other victims are being checked for similar possible contacts.

Meantime, officials were growing more and more confident that they will be able to make a case that Kaczynski, so far charged only with possessing bomb components, is the Unabomber.

There was a meeting Monday at the Justice Department with federal prosecutors from seven states where there has been Unabomber activity. At that preliminary discussion, Sacramento and northern New Jersey emerged as the leading sites for a federal Unabomber prosecution because two killings, in 1994 and 1995, occurred there after the federal death penalty was restored to laws that might apply, a federal official said.

Lab work has begun on tools taken from the Kaczynski cabin, two officials said. The tools are being painstakingly compared with scraps of wire, wood and metal taken from the Unabomber's devices over the years.

Three federal sources told The Associated Press that one live bomb, along with a partially assembled one agents had described in an arrest warrant, had been found in the cabin.

Pres. Bateman to unveil, dedicate 2 plaques that celebrate the 'Y'

By NOELLE BARKER
Universe Staff Writer

Students and faculty are invited to celebrate the spirit and history of the "Y" when President Bateman and other student leaders unveil and dedicate two plaques this evening at 6 at the base of the "Y" mountain.

The first of the two permanent plaques stands nearly seven feet tall and will be located at the "Y" trailhead adjacent to the parking lot. This plaque will give visitors an historical background about the "Y" and how it has become a part of BYU's history. A second, much smaller plaque, will be placed at the "Y," with a panoramic photograph of the Provo and Orem communities highlighting significant points of interest in the area.

For Gary York, a BYU architect who designed the large plaque's stone structure, much of the information on the monument was new to him.

"There's a lot of information here that unless someone did a lot of research, they wouldn't know," York said.

Five years ago, the graduating seniors left money for administrators to use towards the construction of an object that would continue BYU's history. Without any specific ideas, Student Life administrators researched the possibility of constructing a plaque that would provide information about BYU and with time the two plaques developed. The dedication of the plaques is a part of this week's Y-days celebration.

"In 1906, the class of 1907 whitewashed their graduation year on the mountain east of campus. When other students saw these numbers on the mountain, a massive invasion against the offenders began. The 1907's held out as long as they could, but they were finally obliterated. To prevent further clashes, President Brimhall consented to send Ernest Partridge and three of his students, Elmer Jacobs, Clarence Jacobs and Harvey Fletcher, to survey the letters 'B', 'Y' and 'U' on the mountain. After the letters were laid out on the mountain, the entire student body joined together for their first Y-day to whitewash these letters. Harvey Fletcher recalled that:

"The students stood in a zigzag line about eight feet apart stretching from the bottom of the hill to the site of the 'Y'. The first man took the bag of

U.S. evacuates Americans from civil war-torn Liberia

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A team of 18 U.S. Marines and SEAL commandoes was flown to Liberia on Tuesday to reinforce U.S. security and U.S. helicopters began evacuating Americans from the country.

The State Department waited until before midnight to announce a U.S. evacuation from the West African nation even though helicopters carried at least 53 Americans to the capital hours earlier.

Even the unsettled condition in Monrovia, the United States government has decided to evacuate American citizens from the Liberian capital to locations outside of Liberia," said Glyn Davies, a department spokesman.

The evacuation is the third U.S. military rescue operation in this decade triggered by the civil war in Liberia.

A dozen countries, most of them European, have asked the United States for assistance in getting their citizens out of Liberia. The State Department said Tuesday that it was weighing those requests.

Pentagon spokesman Kenneth Bacon said the 18 Navy commandoes were sent to augment the regular team of five U.S. Marine guards at the embassy, where thousands of non-Americans assembled seeking safety.

Two long-range C-5A Galaxy cargo planes were standing by in neighboring Sierra Leone for possible use, but Pentagon officials said the runways and control tower at the Monrovia airport were too badly damaged to permit use of cargo aircraft.

"There's no access to the airport at this time, so they'll be coming out by helicopters," said Navy Cmdr. Bob Anderson with the U.S.-European Command in Freetown, Sierra Leone.

Anderson said five CH-53 transport helicopters, which can handle between 30 and 40 passengers each, were standing by to begin airlifting the Americans to safety. Flying time between Freetown and Monrovia is about an hour and 45 minutes.

Because of limited hotel and other services in Freetown, evacuees will be sent aboard military transport planes to Dakar, Senegal.

In addition to the Americans already awaiting evacuation, Anderson said the rescue team expects to help some representatives from non-governmental organizations and others who wish to leave Liberia.

It appeared likely that U.S. Air Force and Army helicopters would handle most if not all of the air evacuations, said a Pentagon official speaking on condition of anonymity. Officials were considering arranging for some evacuees to leave Liberia by commercial ship but that was uncertain Tuesday night.

Of the 470 Americans in Liberia before the initial evacuation flight, about 110 were at the U.S. Embassy compound, Bacon said. The others were at various compounds elsewhere in the capital.

To determine the safest and most efficient means of evacuation, a six-member Army special forces team flew into the capital Tuesday aboard two MH-53 helicopters, Bacon said. The choppers are heavily armed and are equipped with sophisticated electronic jamming devices for protection.

The six-member "assessment team" was checking out the condition of airport runways and conferring with U.S. Embassy officials. Bacon said they would leave with as many as 25 evacuees in each helicopter.

Serbs free prisoners to get into conference

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Serbs released three Muslim prisoners Tuesday in an effort to meet international demands and gain admittance to a conference where they can lay claim to a share of Bosnia's reconstruction aid.

Top civilian officials said they were encouraged by the freeing of the former prisoners of war but would not announce before today whether the Bosnian Serbs will be allowed to attend the international fundraising conference.

The Bosnian Serbs failed to meet the Friday deadline to free all POWs or gather them in a central place under international supervision and hand over files to a U.N. tribunal in the Netherlands if they were suspected of war crimes.

The Bosnian government and the Bosnian Croats met the deadline.

On Saturday night, the Serbs handed over files on 16 suspected war criminals. On Sunday night and Monday, they moved 19 prisoners to their war capital Pale, just east of Sarajevo. On Tuesday they freed the three prisoners not suspected of war crimes.

The prisoners appeared to be in good condition, but reporters were not able to talk to them.

Birth defects more likely with obese moms

CHICAGO — Obese mothers are at least twice as likely as thinner women to have babies with debilitating birth defects, two studies found.

And folic acid, a vitamin known to help prevent such abnormalities, appears to offer overweight women no protection, the researchers said.

Both studies, published in Wednesday's Journal of the American Medical Association, involved so-called neural tube defects and women who were obese at conception, not those who gained a lot of weight during pregnancy.

The neural tube defects linked to obesity include spina bifida — an incomplete closure of the spinal column that often results in paralysis — to anencephaly, in which most of the brain is missing. The defects annually afflict some 2,500 U.S. babies and an unknown number of miscarried fetuses.

An estimated 10 percent of women of childbearing age are obese.

Former congressman pleads guilty to fraud

WASHINGTON — Former Rep. Dan Rostenkowski pleaded guilty Tuesday to two counts of mail fraud and was immediately sentenced to 17 months in prison and ordered to pay a $100,000 fine.

"You have brought a measure of disgrace" on Congress, U.S. District Court Judge Norman Holloway Johnson lectured Rostenkowski before sentencing him.

The gruff, former head of the tax-writing Ways and Means Committee said the word "guilty" twice when Johnson asked his plea to charges involving the conversion of House funds to personal use.

Rostenkowski, a powerful chairman who ran one of Congress' most powerful committees with an iron hand, was the quintessential congressional deal-maker. Two years ago he had vowed to "fight these false charges" and prevail.

He was charged in May 1994 with converting $636,600 in federal funds — and $56,267 in campaign funds — to his personal use.

Whitewater witness admits false testimony

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — Key Whitewater witness David Hale admitted Tuesday he gave incorrect testimony about his own crimes when he pleaded guilty two years ago, saying he had been "scared to death" and made a mistake.

On the witness stand for a seventh day in the Whitewater trial, Hale made the admission under intense questioning by a lawyer for Gov. Jim Guy Tucker.

Hale had said in a March 1994 court appearance, when he admitted to two felonies, that he didn't think he benefited from several fraudulent loans.

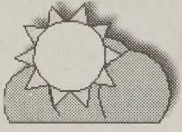

What Hale said was a lie, asserted George Collins, one of Tucker's attorneys. "I think I made a false statement," Hale said. "It was a mistake."

Hale said that on the day of his guilty plea, "I was scared to death."

Collins hammered away at Hale's assertions of wrongdoing by Tucker and Jim and Susan McDougal, who are on trial accused of conspiring to defraud a savings and loan and Hale's lending company. The McDougals were Whitewater business partners of President and Mrs. Clinton.

Hale pleaded guilty to defrauding the Small Business Administration and was sentenced on March 25.

one, sand or rocks and carried it eight feet and handed it to the second man. The second man carried it another eight feet and handed it to a third man. And thus the bag went up the hill, each man shuttling back and forth along his eight foot portion of the trail. All the students started with enthusiasm as they expected to be through by 10 o'clock a.m. But it was a much bigger job than anyone expected. It was 4 p.m. before the "Y" was covered and then by only a thin layer. So no attempt was made to cover the other two letters. It was very hard work and most of the boys had no breakfast and no dinner. No one dared to quit as it would break up the line. In the afternoon it was more than some of them could take and they fainted and had to be helped down the hill. I am sure those who worked in the line that day will never forget it. They were rewarded when they got back to campus and looked at the beautiful white "Y" on the mountainside in just the right proportions. It looked like it was standing in the air just above the ground.

"The letter 'Y', composed of a thin coat of lime powder, needed constant repair which the students wholeheartedly took on as a challenge. In 1908, the students added a layer of rock to the face of the letter. In 1910 or 1911 the blocks, or serifs, were added — transforming it into the block letter we recognize today. In the fall of each year as part of their orientation activities, the freshmen students would bow every day at 9 a.m. and 12 p.m. in anticipation of climbing to the letter and removing brush from the area."

"On Y-day in the spring, the men met early in the morning for roll call. They would head up to the 'Y' and the women would stay behind to prepare the lunch. The faculty cleared the trail, the freshmen hauled water from a spring, sophomores carried up the white wash and mixed it in wooden troughs, and the juniors and seniors poured it on the large letter. The band played music all day to keep the spirits of the workers up. The job required a minimum of 500 pounds of salt, 110 bags of lime, and 3,000 gallons of water."

"This tradition continued until 1972, when the university began using helicopters to carry the whitewash up the mountain. This change was made to reduce the environmental impact on the mountain caused by the yearly bucket brigade. In 1978, the face of the 'Y' was coated with gunite, a mixture of sand and white cement. Over 100 yards of sand, 56,400 pounds of cement and 10,000 gallons of water were used on the project, which took 10 days to complete. After the gunite was applied, the annual whitewashings were no longer needed. The block letter 'Y' is currently painted every 2-5 years as needed. It takes 3 people 10 hours to apply 155 gallons of paint, which is transported by helicopter."

"In 1923 the 'Y' letter was lit for the first time in order to burn back the vegetation which had over-grown the area. It was originally lit with cotton bales or mattress stuffing dipped in pitch. It is currently illuminated by 1,000 25-watt bulbs powered by a 1,500 KVA generator. It takes 3 people 6 hours to put the lights up and 3 hours to take them down."

"What a sight to see! The majestic 'Y' greeting all who arrive in Utah Valley. Even more spectacular is the huge, illuminated letter which gives light to all the world. Although the 'Y' is lit annually on special occasions, it has special meaning for our new students, who upon entering BYU have the letter lit especially for them. By the same token, a student's college career culminates with the lighting of the 'Y' at graduation. Like the sun with her spectacular sunrise and glowing sunset, the lighting of the 'Y' represents the sunrise of the incoming new student and the sunset of the graduating senior."

Mark Hoffman takes stand in Lafferty defense

Associated Press

PROVO — Notorious pipe-bomb killer Mark Hofmann took the stand on behalf of accused killer Ronald Lafferty Tuesday, bolstering defense claims that Dan Lafferty committed the crimes his older brother is on trial for.

Hofmann was a surprise defense witness in the last day of testimony in Lafferty's retrial for the June 1984 slaying deaths of Brenda Wright Lafferty, 24, and her 15-month-old daughter, Erica.

Dan Lafferty, Hofmann testified, confessed to those slayings while the two convicted killers were cellmates in 1989-90.

"(Dan) told me he's the one, that he took both the lives his brother was on death row for," Hofmann told defense lawyer Linda Anderson.

The statement buttressed Dan Lafferty's own testimony last week where, for the first time in the 12-year-old case, he said he killed them both.

Hofmann, 41, has spent nine years in prison for the October 1985 bombing murders of Steve Christensen and Kathleen Sheets in a bloody and futile effort to divert attention from dozens of forgeries he had authored rewriting the early history of the Mormon Church and America itself.

Tuesday was the first time he's ever testified under oath in court. He was silent throughout his own case a decade ago.

He said the discussions about Ron Lafferty came up in 1989 as the state geared up to execute Hi-Fi killer William Andrews. Hofmann ventured that Andrews would not die, since he never actually killed anyone during the vicious 1974 stereo shop robbery that left three dead and two others critically hurt.

Hofmann said Lafferty detailed the July 24, 1984 murders, including a remorseless description of how he killed the child in her crib after forcing their way into Brenda Lafferty's home.

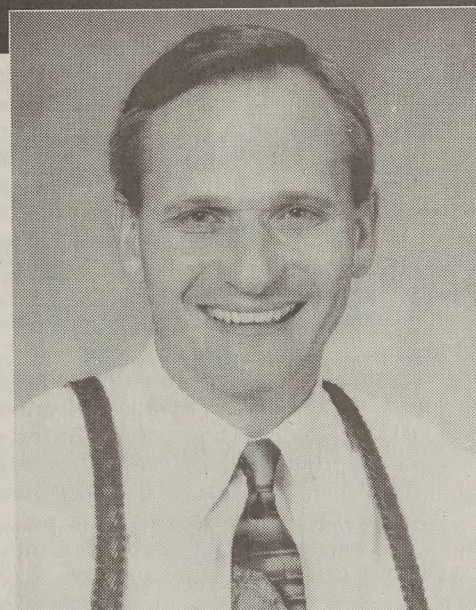

In testimony last week, Dan Lafferty — who calls himself the Prophet Elijah — said he was the arm of God acting on Ron Lafferty's revelation to "remove" the mother and child and two other Utah County residents who had played a role in Ron's recent divorce.

OUR BOSS IS OLD

At Wilson Diamonds our boss is old. Still wears white shirts. Set in his ways. Won't listen to reason.

For instance, his shrewd accountant tells him he could easily raise prices. He says, "trust is a fragile thing." His lawyer points out that his idea of complete warranties costs extra money and time. He says "a good man always keeps his word."

His contemporary suppliers assert that customers will buy what everyone else is selling. He says "A Wilson diamond must be more brilliant."

His 90's business consultant protests that it takes too long to answer all of a customer's questions. He says "pressure is a poor substitute for substance."

Well, you can't say they didn't try to bring him into the nineties. Besides, our customers love Wilson Diamonds just the way it is. Even if we do have an old boss.

FDA should act on study, ban cigarette advertising

According to a study released Wednesday, April 3, teen-agers are three times as likely as adults to respond to cigarette advertisements. Moreover, 79 percent of teen-age smokers prefer brands promoted by the Marlboro Man, Joe Camel, and the fun couples of Newport.

Both Congress and the Food and Drug Administration should look closely at this new evidence and speed up the passing of new regulations that will restrict cigarette advertising to areas where teen-agers are less likely to see it. Federal regulation of cigarette ads has been pending since August, when President Clinton announced a campaign that, in part, would allow only black-and-white ads with words and no pictures on billboards and magazines with large youth readership.

Tobacco lobbyists and some advertisers are naturally upset with the proposed regulation and call it censorship. In many instances, their points would be valid. But this is not so in the case of cigarette advertising. Prior restraint on speech is seldom acceptable, but is not an absolute. This is especially true in cases of commercial speech. In 1983, Federal courts stated that "unlike other areas of First Amendment protection, the commercial speech doctrine is concerned primarily with the level and quality of information reaching the listener." The courts have stated that if information reaching the listener or reader is harmful, there might be grounds for restraint of that speech.

Cigarette smoking leads to 90 percent of all lung cancer deaths each year and smokers lose an average of 8.3 years off their lives because of this habit. Close to 500,000 Americans die each year from smoking-related diseases. It is obvious, then, that cigarettes are harmful to the health of the nation. Likewise, information promoting this habit can be considered harmful and should be grounds for restraint. Of course, Congress already proved this point when they were able to successfully ban cigarette advertising from television in 1971. Now it is simply the time to take the ban a step further and implement it, at least partially, in print media.

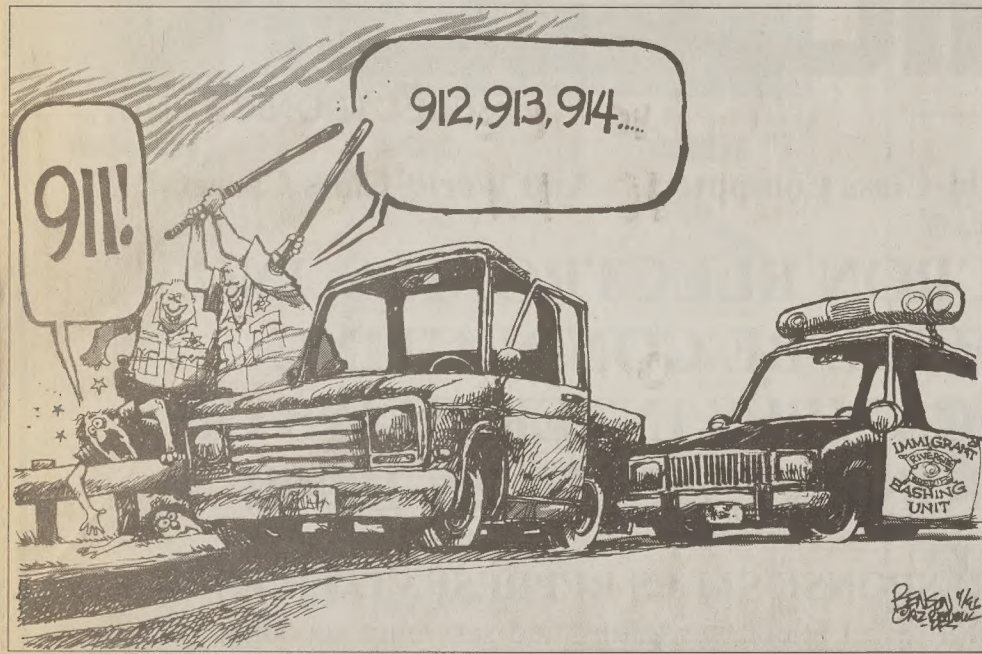

Prior restraint of advertising would be particularly helpful in curbing the number of teen-agers who take up the habit each year. Cigarette makers say their advertisements do not target youth. But the study released last week by the University of British Columbia contradicts this statement. Richard Pollay, the study's author, found that whenever a brand increased its advertising budget by 10 percent, its share of the adult smoking market grew three percent, but its share of teen-age smokers increased by nine percent.

Medical researchers all over the country are finding that young people are influenced by ads that show cigarette smoking as popular and fun "Cigarette smoking is continually associated with social success, sexual attractiveness, a health demeanor, exciting sporting activities, a cool and tough image for the boys, a slender body and liberated spirit for the girls, autonomy and independence for both sexes. What more could an American adolescent want?" said Lloyd Johnston, director of the Monitoring the Future Project at the University of Michigan's Survey Research Center.

John Pierce, a professor of preventative medicine at the University of California-San Diego, furthers Johnston's view in his findings that "the only people starting to smoke these days are kids." Adults don't take up the habit because they have been around long enough to be fully aware of the effects of smoking. This shows that advertising can only be targeted to two groups of people: the young people yet to start smoking and smokers who may switch brands if enticed to do so.

The evidence showing that advertising entices underage citizens to take up smoking is continually mounting. Three million teen-agers smoke, consuming nearly a billion packs each year. Unfortunately, this number is rising and will continue to do so if something is not done to curb the enticing influence of cigarette advertising on underage smokers. The FDA's proposed regulations would begin to help. All that is left to do is for the regulation to be approved. The FDA should act on the results of last week's study, and the many more like it, by speeding up Federal advertising regulations.

Speeding ticket provides trauma

Last weekend, my previously perfect driving record was spoiled by a speeding ticket and I am very bitter. Not because I wasn't speeding — I admit I was going 17 mph over the speed limit when the police officer clocked me while I was passing him. A stupid thing to do, I know, but it was dark and I had already driven 800 miles that day. I was tired and didn't see that it was a cop I was passing, but did he care about that? Oh, no, all he cared about was keeping the interstate highway system safe from felons like me and insisting that I pay $55 to the City of Nephi.

Well, that's just fine. I felt like wasting $55, which is more than I spend on groceries in over a month, but to add insult to injury I got a condescending lecture from a skinny police officer who spoke with that annoying, too-slow Utah accent. When he looked at my driver's license, which was issued in Colorado, he said, "Well, I don't know about Colorado, but here in Utah we issue citations for driving as fast as you were. We don't like reckless drivers." Really. In Colorado we just LOVE reckless drivers. We give them honorary degrees from the University of Colorado and special speeding privileges.

Then he wanted to chat. "Oh, where's Palisade?" he had the temerity to ask me, all the while peering into the car (like I was hiding drugs or a pit bull or something) and blinding me with his flashlight. Feeling quite perverse, I told him that my hometown is a quaint little hamlet situated near Grand Junction on the mighty Colorado River. I elaborated with the fact we have a mainly agricultural economy based on pomology (fruit trees to the layperson), highlighted by the world-famous Palisade peaches. I think he liked that.

The annoyance continued when I had to call the judge noted on the back of my ticket to ask where to send the check. Her snide secretary said with a hint of mockery, "I hope you're not going to CONTEST this." Oh, right. Maybe if I appeared in court and told the judge I'm blind and couldn't see the speedometer, she'd let me off.

When I told my mom about it, which I accidentally did because I am incapable of keeping a secret, she said I should have utilized my feminine charm and started crying, with the hope that the police officer would let me go. Pride would not allow me to do this, but don't think I wasn't tempted -- it worked for my friend Brad.

The biggest trauma of all, though, besides the fact that I had just the day before sent my 17-year-old brother a nasty e-mail teasing him for receiving his first speeding ticket and flaunting my formerly perfect driving record in his face, is that it wasn't even my car. It was my friend's. But I certainly learned my lesson. Never again will I exceed the speed limit, at least not until the next time I decide to make an 820-mile road trip in one day, complete with lengthy stops at Glen Canyon Dam, Lake Powell, and Zion National Park. After all, I signed the Honor Code and I obey the law.

Shorts violations differ according to gender

by Jon Mano
Universe Staff Writer

It's been reported that skirt- and shorts-wearing Cougars have been spotted on campus lately. And as the weather warms up, the debate about shorts on campus will inevitably heat up, too.

The administration has extended the shorts-wearing trial period through summer term. If it feels that enough students are obeying the honor code, shorts will be allowed. If not, shorts will become just another pleasant memory like Saturday morning classic Conjunction Junction.

There seems to be a major problem with this trial period, though — students haven't been informed how it will be determined whether shorts will stay or not.

Will student opinions be taken into account during the decision-making process? Will faculty be surveyed to see if they think there are too many violations in the classroom? Or will they just count up the number of honor code violations turned in?

If it's just left to the whim of the administration, it's too arbitrary. Students should be informed how the administration will decide this issue. Not only would that make the administration more accountable for its decision, but put more responsibility on the students.

A source that works with some of the BYU higher-ups told me that one of them comes into the office on a regular basis, telling everyone how many violators he has seen that day. The number of these "Daisy Dukes," as he likes to call them, is quite high — usually in the double digits in about an hour's time.

It really doesn't surprise me that he sees so many females breaking the rule — I've been looking at the length of shorts on campus and, for the most part, males seem to be wearing shorts that are long enough. There are some guys who don't, of course, but I think it is a small enough number that the administration would allow shorts to stay.

But count the number of female violators on campus — there are tons. Now I agree that many are still dressed modestly even if the shorts don't hit the knees, but that's not the point. What's important is if BYU views it as inappropriate — and it has stated clearly that shorts must hit the knees.

So what do we do to solve the problem? I don't know. But I do have a proposal which would be more fair to the majority of shorts-wearing population — judge female and male students separately.

I've already had some females become upset at my suggestion, but this is not a sexist remark or opinion. It's a fact — there are quite a few more females breaking the rule. Therefore, why should the other half of the population, some 15,000 students, be punished also?

No, it's not fair that a lot of women will be punished even though they're obeying the rule. But at least by separating the males and females, it reduces the number of innocent victims.

This viewpoint shouldn't be upsetting to anyone, actually. Think about it, if it were actually the males who were breaking the rule, females would be ecstatic at this suggestion.

No, this is not the most democratic suggestion, and I realize that our country does not make laws based on gender. But since when has BYU been considered a democratic institution?

Cartoon insults Islam

To the Editor:

I am writing this letter in response to the April 3 Benson cartoon bearing the banner "Muzzlim" and I would like to thank Jim Phipps, whose response was very good. I would like to add some more to it for the people like Benson who like to express their jokes at others' expense and to the Daily Universe, which doesn't have any policy against publishing cartoons containing religiously offensive material.

First of all, Farrakhan and the Nation of Islam do not represent Islam in any way and their acts have nothing to do with Islam. They merely represent a black organization that politically supports them. Second, bringing in Islam and making jokes, or representing that Muslims support him is really offensive and shows the ignorance people have. Our religion has the best standards and doesn't support wrong beliefs, doings and the people who do these acts. We respect our religion and expect other people to respect it as well.

My point is this: every thing that you think (Benson) is not funny. If you don't know anything about others, you'd better confirm it and make sure it is appropriate to publish. Or maybe you are one of those who like to make or write jokes at others' expense without prior thinking. If you are religious enough and respect your religion, you should put yourself in our shoes and see how it feels when someone from outside makes or illustrates jokes about your religion. I seriously think that you should apologize for that cartoon in the Daily Universe. Also, the Daily Universe, which is published by a Church school, should not let people write and publish offensive material in the newspaper. I always believe that a college newspaper is a means of publishing informative material, not a means of publishing junk.

Dorm rules not too strict

To the Editor:

I don't think anything ticks me off more than when I hear fellow students that complain about BYU because of the strict rules that it has, especially the visiting hour policy that BYU uses to restrict the opposite sex in the hallways and rooms in dormitories.

I passed a girl on campus talking to another girl, and she was crying and complaining about how she felt that she was being baby-sat here at BYU. She felt that there were just too many rules. She was upset because BYU doesn't have the same visitation freedom in the dormitories that "other" universities have.

BYU has this rule because BYU is not interested in watching the virtue of its students go down the tubes. Everyone knows what kind of immorality occur at the "other" universities where girls and boys are free to stay all day long together in their dormitories.

The dormitories at BYU are filled with young men preparing for missions and young ladies who plan to marry in the temple someday. The leaders who installed the visitation policy were inspired when they did so. They were interested in protecting the young men and women's futures from the grasps of Satan's temptations. Everyone always says, "But if the Mormons would never have the problems of the 'other' universities have because we have higher standards!" What a joke! All you LDS men have the same hormones, and when you're alone in a bad situation Satan is just getting excited to tear down a young individual, especially an LDS individual.

BYU is one of the most respected universities in the country, and we all know how difficult it is to be accepted here. Nobody is forced to come here, and it is not like any other university where they get here to see that they are in a heavy set of rules to abide by. Ever since we signed the Honor Code, and we are obligated to obey what the leaders tell us to obey, I guarantee that if you want to leave and go somewhere else, there are many that want to be here.

The dormitories are a great place here at BYU where many friends can be made. If you come to BYU because of its atmosphere and know that the leaders are interested in protecting our standards by setting high ones for everyone, say, "The rules stay here at BYU," so it can always be a place where God's spirit is abundant. And to that girl who was crying about the rules, if you don't like the grassy hill at BYU, then go find a different grassy hill to study at; maybe the U of U will let you do what you want to in their dorms.

Family Expo gives parents helpful hints

Children's hearts turn when raised in light of God

By HELENA HARO
Universe Staff Writer

The 1996 Family Expo stressed bringing up children with the light of Heavenly Father in their lives. Bruce C. Hafen, current provost and newly called elder to the Quorum of the Seventy, spoke Tuesday in a keynote address to parents and grandparents who attended the conference. Elder Hafen spoke about the value and importance of family life in children's lives. He said that BYU should be the center for understanding family life and that people should all work together to make home a successful family.

Teaching gospel principles brings great joy, molds successful families

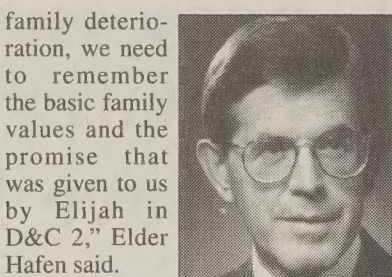

By KERSTIN SMITH
Universe Staff Writer

comes from teaching children principles in the walls of the home. General Relief Society President Elaine L. Jack said Monday "Bringing up Children in Light of God" Family Expo. Elder Hafen, who is also a member of the Board of Trustees, said no greater joy is found than in teaching the gospel, being an example to children, showing them the Lord's love and then seeing them choose the right path. "Family history is a study of families and their willingness to follow God's commandments," she said. Elder Hafen said one of the most common family examples is that of Joseph and Sarah, from the Book of Mormon. Another Testament of Jesus Christ. They "shared common purpose and firm resolve to follow the commandments and live his commandments. They were fine parents, faithful and loving." Elder Hafen said that Joseph, Lehi and Sarah's first-born children were raised in the wilderness, never knew a period of sustained family harmony, Jack said.

Others guide today's 'stripling warriors'

By LAUREN COMSTOCK
Universe Staff Writer

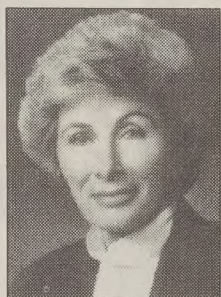

Ardeeth G. Kapp told women at Family Expo Monday that they are the mothers of today's stripling warriors. She said that the challenges of raising children today are different from the challenges of the past. "We are not the mothers of today's stripling warriors," she said. "We are the mothers of today's young men. We are the mothers of today's young women. We are the mothers of today's young people. We are the mothers of today's children. We are the mothers of today's families. We are the mothers of today's world." She said that the mothers of today's stripling warriors are the mothers of today's young men and women. They are the mothers of today's young people. They are the mothers of today's children. They are the mothers of today's families. They are the mothers of today's world.

ELDER HAFEN

Students, parents and children have promises made to them if they follow God's commandments, Elder Hafen said. The fifth commandment promises that our days will be long upon the land if we honor our fathers and our mothers, he said. Provost Hafen said working together as families will ensure that the hearts of children and parents are turned to each other. He said that parents need to understand that patience is the key to the growing process.

of sustained family harmony, Jack said. "We can learn so much from him about facing problems without being deterred."

SIS. JACK

There is no greater joy than teaching principles in our homes, she said. Quoting from the Proclamation of the Family, a statement from The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, Jack said, "Successful families are established and maintained on principles of faith, prayer, repentance, forgiveness, respect, love, compassion, work and wholesome recreational activities."

Vancouver Mission "was like being on the front lines with stripling warriors and hoping you can keep up. The youth of today are an incredible group, and sometimes in their immaturity we misjudge their capacity."

"God has saved for the final inning some of his stronger and more valiant children," she said. "Do you think God would have sent a generation of children prepared to meet their God without a generation of mothers ahead? Who are you?"

Motherhood is a sacred and significant role, she said. No calling in the church can compare. The things her missionaries remembered about their mothers confirmed where their instruction came from.

One missionary was a linebacker for BYU's football team, and he said that his favorite memory was his mother telling the story of the three little pigs.

When Sister Kapp asked him what he liked most about the story he told her it was the wolf's persistence.

Sister Kapp said the missionary's mother probably didn't know, while she was reading that story to her son, that she was planting the seeds of a strong and persistent missionary and of a BYU line-backer.

"When we do the best we can, the Lord will make up the difference," she said. "Save a young woman, and you save a generation."

Alma did not remember what his father had told him until he was at the depths of despair. Sometimes it just takes time.

"My son, John, was never a bad kid, he was just difficult to deal with sometimes, and he took a lot of patience. John once told his younger brother that it was OK to steal stuff until he was eight years old."

"When I asked my son why he told his younger brother that, John said it was true. Kids can do anything they want, and when they turn eight years old all their sins will be washed away — he should just live it up now while he has the chance," Elder Hafen said.

Many people believe that we should all be free, not having to answer to anyone — some will even say that about children. They say if we treat them like adults they will act like adults. Children need direction, he said.

"But the only people that is helping is the adults, and it is only giving them a selfish answer to hard problems," Elder Hafen said.

Children should be taught the difference between right and wrong and then be given the chance to make decisions based on what they have been taught, he said.

Parents need to find out how much it matters to their children to work together and show love always, Elder Hafen said.

Parents need to be a good example because children will treat others the way they have been treated. It is important for parents to take an active role now, he said.

"Parents and adults need to be good examples to their children and turn around destruction before it is too late."

"Actively live the commandments of God and make sure the hearts are going in the same direction and not apart," Elder Hafen said.

MIN': Extempo, a professional a cappella group that got started at BYU, performs at the Provo Tabernacle in 1994. The BYU a cappella scene is thriving.

cappella a popular trend at BYU

By JOY HIATT

Special to the Universe

Cappella music, a popular singing style at BYU, has busy students singing several hours each week, sometimes missing valuable homework time so they can perform well at events like tonight's A Cappella concert, where several a cappella groups will perform for free at 7 p.m. in the SWKT quad, the culmination of a semester-long effort by members of the BYU A Cappella Club. These members, who come from majors like computer science, mechanical engineering, and represents a larger movement of a cappella group in the Provo area. Members of BYU's Men's Chorus are standing ovation and praise as the best choirs in America after performing an a cappella African song, "Mehemu," for a tired audience of directors in California March Chorus is just one aspect of the cappella talent. Professional groups like 6 Trac and Extempo are known from BYU's A Cappella Club, which spawns anywhere from ten to ten a cappella groups each year. "I've always had an interest in a cappella," said Paul Pampinella, a member of the professional a cappella group, Vox One.

Cappella music drives local audiences to whistling, cheering and what I've witnessed, the a cappella scene at BYU is about the best anywhere," Pampinella said. "We (Vox One) have performed at Extempo at the Provo Tabernacle, and the exuberance of the audience there was unbelievable. We were so lucky to perform for a large audience here in Boston."

Residents seem to have a special affinity for unaccompanied singing, possibly because of the high concentration of members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

"Utah has a strong musical tradition," said Rick McFarland, a BYU graduate who was in BYU's only sponsored a cappella group, Vocal Point, when it first formed. "It's accepted for a bunch of guys to get together and sing and goof off."

Even non-Utah residents who have never been to Provo see the potential talent of its residents.

"I have always imagined that the Provo area would be rich in a cappella groups, especially as there are many Mormons there, and they are known for being very fine and dedicated singers," said Kathleen Lennon, a psychology professor at Boston College who also sings in an a cappella group in Sagamore, Mass.

Men's Chorus, which sings most of its songs a cappella, sells out every concert on BYU campus. Extempo, 6 Trac and Vocal Point, formed mostly by former members of BYU's A Cappella Club, also sell out most performances.

Vocal Point's popularity has spread to Arizona and Idaho, and the group did 33 performances during the 1994 to 1995 school year, said Russell Gorringer, who schedules all of BYU's performing groups in his work at Performing Arts Management.

"They've got a lot of loyal followers," Gorringer said. "The LDS bookstores call us and say people are asking for their CD's."

A national a cappella group, the Contemporary A Cappella Society of America, named Extempo's song, "Blessed Are," as the second-best gospel/contemporary Christian a cappella song released in 1995. Extempo's song lost first place to Rockapella, the nationally-known group that sings "Where In The World Is Carmen San Diego?"

The love for a cappella keeps new local performers singing.

The BYU A Cappella Club, founded by original Vocal Point members

Dave Boyce and Bob Ahlander, helps local performers form into workable groups.

Glen Sawyer, the club's president, joined the club after seeing a flyer in 1993 and is still an avid a cappella fan and performer.

"Human voices have the capability of blending and harmonizing more closely than any instrument," said Sawyer, a computer science graduate student from Provo. "A cappella music can be much more direct than other forms."

SHARING MUSIC: Members of the University Fine Arts Center. The band will perform in the de Jong Concert Hall Friday at 7 p.m.

Students share music in audition-free band

By JOANNE BUTTERFIELD
Universe Staff Writer

On the second floor of the Harris Fine Arts Center each Wednesday night 107 students from a variety of majors and levels in school gather together to share one thing they all have in common.

That thing is their love for music. The University Band, Music 325R, meets on Wednesday nights from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. in E-250 HFAC. This band is under the direction of Randall Beach.

Beach said this band is open to all students who are interested in playing their instruments and does not require an audition.

Most of the students are non-music majors, Beach said. He said many are members of the marching band which takes place during the fall semester. He said there are also quite a few students who have played in high school or college and want to continue to play their instruments.

This is the first semester the University Band has been in existence and will continue to be offered each winter semester.

"Our intention is to keep the band open to all students who are interested and who want to come play with a quality band," Beach said.

Since the band only rehearses once a week, Beach said they have two objectives. The first is to select a handful of pieces to perform for the concert at the end of the year. The second is to play through a lot of different concert band literature at a variety of difficulty levels.

Beckie Bramer, a junior from Mechanicsburg, Penn., majoring in math and French education, said anyone can be in the class, but they need to want to do it. She plays the tuba in the University Band.

Bramer said the band plays a variety of different styles of music. She said they are currently working on some soft and mellow pieces as well as some which are very rhythmic.

Bramer said she loves playing with this group.

"It's my chance to play my instrument," she said. "Otherwise, I wouldn't have anything to play during the winter semester."

Bramer has been in the marching band during the fall semester.

Sarah Warner, a freshman from Highland, Ill., with an open major, said she feels the same way about playing in the University Band.

"I've always had something to do with music but I didn't want the pressure of auditioning for a band," Warner said.

"I can't imagine my life without the music," Warner said.

Warner said playing with the band is a challenge and provides opportunities for individual accomplishment.

The concert will be Friday night at 7 p.m. in the de Jong Concert Hall. The concert will also feature chamber groups, admission is free.

Play dedicated to employee's family

By CATHY ANN SCHMITT
Universe Staff Writer

A performance of a graduate theater production will be dedicated to raise funds in behalf of Jack Reeves, a 17-year BYU employee who died last week, to help his wife and 11 children, said Catherine Riggs, publicity director for the event.

Matt Neves, director of the project, is a graduate student in theater. Shakespeare's "King John" is a graduate project featuring about 20 actors from BYU, UVSC, one high school and other community members.

"King John" is a full-length play and will be performed Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday at 7:30 p.m. and at 2:30 p.m., at the Margetts Theatre, HFAC.

Performers are asking for a $2 minimum donation at the door, but are requesting that those in attendance be as generous as they can, Neves said.

All proceeds from the Wednesday show will be given to Reeves' family to assist in any funeral arrangements and other costs, Riggs said.

"The donation usually goes toward covering costs of production, but the cast and I feel that helping Reeves' family is much more important," Neves said.

The cast is excited about the opportunity to help the family and feel the play will mean that much more because of the great purpose behind the Wednesday performance. They are grateful they have this chance to contribute, Neves said.

The cast is pulling together to help out and hope they can help the Reeves' as much as they can, Neves said.

People who attend the play on a night other than Wednesday can give donations specifically for Reeves. The music department is also collecting donations.

FAST PITCH: Cougar pitcher Julie Risdon fires a pitch during the first game of a doubleheader vs. UVSC. Risdon was overpowering, giving up just one hit and leading the Cougars to a 1-0 win. The second game was also all BYU as they swept away with a victory 5-0.

UVSC no match for Cougar pitching

Wolverines go home without touching Y pitchers for a run

By SCOTT APGAR
Universe Sports Writer

The BYU softball team sent UVSC back to Orem winless and scoreless Tuesday evening. Cougar pitching and defense set the agenda for the doubleheader. The theme of the first game for the Cougar pitchers who weren't able to score a runner until the seventh inning capturing the win 1-0. Cougar pitcher Julie Risdon had a no-hitter going into the top of the seventh inning when she gave up the first and only UVSC hit of the game. "I was hitting my spots really good today," Risdon said. "My drop pitch was working especially well." Throughout the game BYU had opportunities to score but the Cougar pitchers were too good. The Cougars amassed seven hits but scored only one run. Before Dani Anderson drove in Sunshine Van Wie to score the winning run in the bottom of the last inning, the Cougars had four other chances to score runs from second and third base. For example, in the bottom of the fifth inning, UVSC intentionally walked Cougar slugger Jill Combe to load the bases with two outs and face Wolverine alumna Kat Andrus. Andrus flied out to centerfield to end the inning. The next inning Sarah Roberts was thrown out at first base by the right fielder and nullified a would-be BYU score. The bottom of the seventh inning was the Cougar's last chance to score, and they did just that when Anderson hit a hard line drive into left field to bring in Van Wie from second base, who had walked and stolen a base to get into scoring position. "I didn't feel like we were very intense until we realized it was the seventh inning and we needed to win," Van Wie said. The second game started strong for the Cougars. In the first inning Erin Ellsworth singled, Van Wie singled and Anderson brought everyone home on a fence-clearing, three-run line drive. The Cougars scored two more runs to clinch the second game with a 5-0 victory. "We hit the ball both games; we just scored the second game," assistant coach Darren Draper said. The Cougars play at Snow College today and host Colorado Northwestern Community College Friday at 4:30 p.m.

Wooden not happy with modern college game

Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Former UCLA coach John Wooden was back in his coaching state Monday talking basketball, and he made it clear there is a lot he does not like about the college game more than two decades after his retirement. "Nothing raised his ire more than the players leaving college early for the NBA," Wooden told reporters before a press conference. "Basketball is just a game." Wooden, 85, led Martinsville High School to the Indiana state basketball championship in 1927 before heading to Purdue, where he was an All-American from 1930-32. When Wooden made his name outside of Indiana as a coach at UCLA, where he won 10 NCAA titles with players such as Lew Alcindor and Bill Walton. In 1964 to 1975 with players such as Lew Alcindor and Bill Walton. In 1964 to 1975 with players such as Lew Alcindor and Bill Walton. In 1964 to 1975 with players such as Lew Alcindor and Bill Walton.

sees little reason for players to leave school early and that the NBA needs to show some restraint in drafting younger players. "The colleges can't do anything about that," he said. "It's the pros that have to do that. I think the pros would be better served themselves if they didn't take the youngsters out early." In last year's NBA draft, the first four players chosen were sophomores. Maryland's Joe Smith was the second sophomore in three years to go No. 1. But he wasn't the youngest. Kevin Garnett declared himself eligible for the draft after his senior year of high school and now is finishing his rookie year with the Minnesota Timberwolves. This year, Georgia Tech freshman Stephon Marbury, 19, announced he is eligible for the draft. "I think that professionally, (players would) be better grounded, more mature, be able to deal with the professional aspects better if they finished college," Wooden said. "When they had the rule that they couldn't draft a player until he finished college, I thought that was a good rule." Among Wooden's other observations of the college game: -There's too much showmanship and too much taunting among players. "I blame the coaches." -The 3-point line is too close. "I think that a shot from 19-feet, 9-inches is worth three points is ridiculous," he said. "I like the 3-point shot, but it's much too close." -There's too much emphasis on dunking. "I think a dunk shouldn't count more than one point."

Y shows heart in comeback

Cougars extend win streak to 10

By DAVID BROBERG
Universe Sports Writer

The Cougar baseball team rallied for a 6-5 victory against Albertson College and maintained its mid-season momentum by sweeping yet another series. The second game of a two-game series with Albertson College started off with four runs by the Coyotes off freshman pitcher Sky Grant. On the first pitch in the bottom of the first, BYU's Ryan Roberts hit his team-leading 14th home run, but this wasn't enough. BYU found themselves down 5-1 after five innings when Eric McDowell belted a double in the right-center gap and knocked in three runs. McDowell, who has a team-leading .408 batting average, stroked the double with two outs and two strikes against him. "I had to take advantage of that hanging curve," McDowell said. LeRoy Brown came home on a long single by right fielder Jason Woolley to tie the score in the sixth inning. Then in the seventh, Patrick Johnson led off the inning with a powering double that turned into a run when "Mr. Double Trouble," Glen Spencer, hit a clutch single with two outs. "The difference in this ball game was the two-out base hits, and some gutty play by the guys, and I'd like to say Scott Tittington," head coach Gary Pullins said. "His pitching was tremendous for us. It shut the door, and Brett (McDermid) came in at the right time to close it out." Pullins praised the efforts of Tittington, a transfer left-hander from the University of Kansas, who came in the second inning and pulled the plug on the Coyote offense for the win. In the eighth inning, Brett McDermid came in for relief and didn't allow Albertson College to rally back. The Coyotes had two men on in the eighth when McDermid struck out Greg Schelhaas to end the inning. BYU is now looking forward to an exciting series against the University of Utah on Thursday, Friday and Saturday. "We're pretty confident going into the Utah series that we're going to hit the ball well, we're going to play good defense, and our pitchers are going to get the job done," Spence said. The Cougars have now won 10 games in a row, and they feel their confidence is building.

Murphy to speak about baseball life

By BRIAN ANDERSON
Universe Sports Writer

Personal responsibility and experiences in professional baseball will be addressed today by Dale Murphy, a former Atlanta Braves star and BYU alumnus.

The event is sponsored by the Dittohead Conservative Club on campus, and will be held in the auditorium of the Joseph Smith Memorial Building (140 JSB) at 11:00 a.m. The event is open to the general student body.

"I'll share some philosophies and experiences I gained through professional baseball," Murphy said. "I'll share a few of my thoughts about believing in yourself, and some of the everyday things that baseball has taught me."

"There were a lot of guys out there that had some ability or talent, but they didn't work at it, and they tended to blame others for things that would happen."

After retiring from the game, the 40-year-old Murphy has enjoyed the time he has been able to spend with his family. As a player, Murphy was known for giving his time to others — a part of life of which retirement has not stolen from him.

"Dale Murphy touches on moral issues in a real poignant way," Perry Smith, the president of the Dittohead Club, said. "Whenever we have people come speak, we like them to exemplify what they talk about."

It would be close to impossible to find a better speaker to address personal responsibility than Dale Murphy. This is a man who Sports Illustrated has called the Jimmy Stewart of a profession known for its tobacco chewing and cussing.

Murphy's claim to fame, however, is not only his clean cut, Stewart-like image. His two National League MVP nominations in 1982 and 1983, and 1982 Rawlings Gold Glove Award speak for themselves. Murphy was also named to the All-Star team seven times.

National Champion Y poised to defend title

By BRIAN ANDERSON
Universe Sports Writer

The National Champion BYU racquetball team left Tuesday for Fountain Valley, Calif., to defend their national title. And despite a lot of teams the Cougars don't know about, their toughest competition could be the University of Southern Colorado, a team with which the Cougars have had experience.

BYU assistant coach, Roger Flick, is worried about a lot of USC's top Mexican recruits.

"We will probably be opposite of USC so we won't meet until the finals. There are other schools as good as USC and BYU, but it's a matter of depth. So it'll be interesting to see how it turns out."

It is the depth of this BYU team that helped the Cougars claim the national title last year. The points are tallied from each of the wins in each division, and the higher divisions offer more points for first place than do the lower divisions. Both the men's and women's teams contribute to the point total, and the overall national championship trophy is then awarded to the team with the most points. Last year, it was the women's team that sealed the title for BYU. This year, the women will be relied on again.

Sylvia Sawyer, BYU assistant coach, said they are aiming for the top.

"After winning the national title, we don't have our sights set on anything less," Sawyer said. "I really sincerely think the girls team will get the national title. I hope (the men's team) does equally well. We have a good strong team with a lot of depth."

A tournament such as this has a knack for exposing the depth of a team.

"All the points count toward the overall (collegiate team) trophy," Sawyer said. "That's the beauty of the tournament. One person alone isn't going to do it. If she (Christine McAlpine who is playing in the number one position for the Cougars) did well, she would garner the most points — being in the top division. I really expect that for the division II on down to take the gold. I expect Christine to end in the top four."

While McAlpine will be pitted against the best in the nation, coach Flick expects the men's team to finish just as high.

"We'll end up in the top four," Flick said. "It varies each year (because) the students are always coming and going, and we don't know how the other teams will do. I think there might be some surprises in the first round. If we (are scheduled to) play on Sunday, that almost guarantees that we wouldn't take the national title."

Ben McClure, a BYU player, feels the Cougars will do just a little bit better.

"I think we'll have our hands full," McClure said. "I think we would do good to take third. That's my personal prediction. It will be a lot tougher than last year. We're going to have to play out of our minds."

Playing in a lower division for BYU has put some pressure on McClure because he is expected to take first in his division.

"In the past, BYU has done well in the lower divisions because of our depth," McClure said. "Yeah, that puts pressure on me."

Some of the players have packed their bags with swimming suits — hoping to take advantage of the nearby Newport Beach. Coach Sawyer, however, feels that the team won't get to use them because they will be busy cheering for their teammates.

"They hardly go back to the hotel, or read, or do their studies," Sawyer said of the Cougars' behavior in past tournaments.

BYU player, Amanda Van Orman, disagreed.

"It will be a fun trip," Van Orman said. "We'll have a good time — maybe get a tan before summer comes. (Cheering for the team and supporting them) is a really important part. We support each other well, but I think we'll find some time for fun too."

"Circle of Honor" Award Recipients

All the way from Lodz, Poland, Greg Pawlik is a sophomore majoring in Math. It is obvious to those close to Greg that he takes his commitment to the Honor Code very seriously. He is courageous in defending the principles which he understands are vital to developing and maintaining good character. Perhaps some of this courage was learned as a youth in Poland, where he was active in an anti-communism organization, participating in demonstrations and distributing pamphlets. Greg's example has helped his friends to recommit themselves to living the Honor Code in full. His friends appreciate that his words and deeds are consistent, and have described him as being "principle-oriented", "humble, gentle, warm, and loving," but it is his "inner core of solid iron" that they value most.

As BYUSA President, Wesley McDougal needs no introduction to the student body. Wes has made the Honor Code a high priority during his year as President of the Student Service Association, beginning with the NSO Morningside, where he emphasized to freshmen the importance of their commitment to the Code which makes this campus unique. He invited freshmen to visit the BYUSA offices to sign the "Book of Honor," to show their commitment to the Honor Code. Over 400 signatures were collected over the summer. Wes has taught most effectively through his own example beyond his impressive dress and grooming standards, Wes has encouraged service, honesty, and integrity in each student. His bold stand on Honor Code issues has had a great impact on campus.

In a ceremony held at the Unforum yesterday, Melinda Pine and David Johnson, student members of the Honor Code Council, presented Circle of Honor awards to five BYU students. The ceremony was held in the Marriott Center during the regular Devotional hour. Brief biographies of the student recipients are shown with their photographs alongside this article.

The "Circle of Honor" is a new award and was designed to recognize those students whose lives reflect the spirit of the 13th Article of Faith and who are exemplary in living and promoting the BYU Honor Code. The name for the award was taken from the ongoing campaign, spearheaded by the Honor Code Council, which highlights Karl G. Maeser's wellknown standard of integrity:

I have been asked what I mean by word of honor. I will tell you. Place me behind prison walls-wall of stone ever so high, ever so thick, reaching ever so far into the ground-there is a possibility that in some way or another I may escape; but stand me on the floor and draw a chalk line around me and have me give my word of honor never to cross it. Can I get out? No. Never! I'd die first!

Desmond Eppel, student chair of the Honor Code Council, says that the Council was looking for some way to thank those students who are consistent in their commitment to the Honor Code. "We feel that encouraging compliance is only a part of our role on campus. We are also concerned with recognizing the large majority of the student body who understand and love the principles behind the Honor Code."

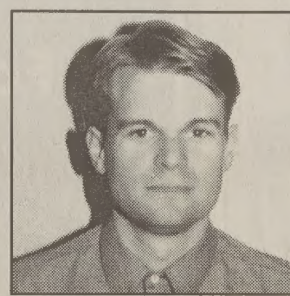

Honor Code Council Thanks Students

In every way, Margie Richardson's life exemplifies the principles of the 13th Article of Faith and the BYU Honor Code. Margie is a senior from Tempe, AZ majoring in Recreation Management and Youth Leadership. Despite peer pressure to compromise her principles, Margie maintains her honesty and integrity. She is trusted by her teachers, her employers, her friends and her associates, and encourages them to be honest through her example. Her actions reflect a clean mind and a pure heart, while her dress and grooming is invariably modest, regardless of the season. Margie is perhaps best known for her benevolence and is always ready to help others, often placing their needs above her own. Her friends count it a blessing and a privilege to know Margie and love to be in her company because she promotes all that is best in them.

Holly Piquet, a senior from Corona, CA, in the Nursing program, enjoys seeing the best in others and pointing it out. Her friends have said that she helps them to understand their potential and to develop positive attitudes. Her own optimism seems to stem from her focus on others-she simply loves people! As a result of this love, Holly is frank and honest in her dealings, which helps her to avoid contention. Holly keeps perspective and endears herself to others by remembering her imperfections (though no-one can think of any) and being completely respectful of others. Her honesty allows those who know her well to trust her entirely for advice and counsel. Everyone agrees that those who will be in her nursing care will be fortunate indeed!

S. Scott Ashworth, a senior majoring in Manufacturing Engineering, is from Battleground, WA. He is straightforward and honest in all of his dealings, preferring to give more than a full day's work for a day's pay. Scott believes in "doing good to all men" and has developed a habit of service without expectation of reward. He regularly puts his skills as a handyman to good use in helping others. The Dress & Grooming Standards are important to Scott. This is an area where he is especially careful to keep himself well with in the "Circle of Honor." Scott is true to his beliefs and actively shares them when he can find a listening ear. In all of his activities, Scott maintains a positive, upbeat attitude, encouraging others to enjoy their lives now and to be hopeful and optimistic for the future.

BYU's men's lacrosse team jeopardized its chance for a top post-season tournament seed with a disappointing 15-13 loss to Denver on Saturday, but the Cougars avenged the loss on Monday by drubbing the Colorado School of Mines 20-8. On Thursday, the Alta Club of Salt Lake City visits Provo to challenge the 8-2 Cougars.

Injury bug bites major leagues

Associated Press

After winning the National League pennant in 1993, the Philadelphia Phillies have had to assign players to the disabled list an astounding 55 times. None was as painful as the last one, though.

On Sunday, the Phillies placed the season-turned-outfielder Darren Daulton on the 15-day disabled list. Daulton, whose surgery-ravaged right knee forced the three-time All-Star to move to left field, said he would return to the Phillies' training camp in Florida to rehabilitate the knee he tore last August.

Phillies manager Jim Fregosi and pitcher Bill Giles both fought back after Daulton made his announcement, leading to speculation the 34-year-old may soon retire.

Just last week, the Phillies were forced to place first baseman Gregg Jefferies on the DL after he tore a ligament in his left thumb while diving for a first into third base on a triple.

Before Sunday's game, Daulton stressed the Phillies' ongoing battle with injuries. It was eerily prophetic.

"I don't even want to mention what happened last year to this club with all the injuries, but, yeah, you can get a thought process of 'Here we go again.' But we've still got too much to do."

Daulton is only the latest big-name player forced to the DL. The current crop of players nursing ailments ended last season or during spring training reads like an All-Star roster.

Los Angeles' Ramon Martinez, Oakland's Mark McGwire, Minnesota's Kirby Puckett and Rick Ankiel, Colorado's Bret Boone, Cincinnati's Jose Rijo, California's Lee Smith, Houston's Lyle Hudek and the New York Yankees' Tony Fernandez and Tim Lincecum.

Raines head the roll call of high-profile list of injured players.

And, the list keeps growing.

What's going on here? Why are big leaguers falling to the injury bug?

—Bad weather. Unusually cold temperatures froze players and fans during the season's first week. Snow and rain forced seven postponements, including two in Cleveland and Philadelphia. Even Texas had a rare rainout.

The Dodgers and Cubs endured freezing temperatures at Wrigley Field during their four-game series. On Saturday, Martinez hit a grounder, ran three steps and stumbled. He was helped off the field and will be sidelined for two weeks.

"That's the first time I had a groin injury like that," Martinez said.

Dodgers manager Tommy Lasorda thinks he knows why.

"Here's a guy in the best of shape," said Lasorda, who complained earlier in the week when umpires made the teams play despite snow, rain and a 12-degree wind chill. "He does more running than anybody you'll see and he pulls a groin muscle. Why? Because of the cold weather."

—Bad luck. Jefferies was 0-for-9 over the first two games when he lined a pitch off the right-field wall in Philadelphia. He saw Colorado right fielder Dante Bichette misplay the ball, headed for third and dived into the bag.

"When I slid into third, both hands actually got stuck in the dirt," Jefferies said. "I tried to pull it back into place, but it didn't work, obviously."

He's expected to miss two months. "It's very frustrating," he said, fighting back tears.

"I told him to slide, but I didn't tell him to slide head-first," third base coach Larry Bowa said.

It was so easy!

Words of warning on Olestra's label cause controversy

Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Either way you say it, it's not too appetizing.

The government wants potato chips and other products containing Procter & Gamble's new fat substitute to carry a label warning that olestra may cause "abdominal cramping and loose stools."

No need to get so graphic, P&G says. Less explicit words, like "intestinal discomfort and a laxative effect," will suffice.

P&G spokeswoman Sydney McHugh said Tuesday the consumer products giant on April 1 asked the Food and Drug Administration to rewrite the label. The FDA will require it on all products containing the substitute, which will be test-mar-keted this summer under the brand name Olean in Pringles snack chips.

Company tests, McHugh said, showed that the FDA's wording is unclear and will confuse people.

The company also asked the FDA to drop a requirement that the label be enclosed in a black box, saying P&G consumer tests showed buyers per-ceived the product as unsafe.

The FDA on Jan. 24 approved olestra as an ingredient in salted snacks but required that such foods carry a warning saying: "This product contains olestra. Olestra may cause abdominal cramping and loose stools. Olestra inhibits the absorption of some vitamins and other nutrients. Vitamins A, D, E and K have been added."

The Center for Science in the Public Interest — a Washington-based consumer watchdog group that opposes the FDA's decision to allow olestra on the market — says neither label is sufficient. The center said the label should spell out the possibilities: diar-rhea, nausea, gas and bloating.

"The word 'diarrhea' on a tube of Pringles might not be appetizing, but consumers have a right to know what olestra may do to them," said Executive Director Michael Jacobson.

The FDA will decide on the wording sometime before olestra hits store shelves, spokesman Arthur Whitmore said.

This is more than a war of words, said marketing consultant Jack Trout.

"I think Procter is trying to essen-tially head off potentially big-time problems at the pass," said Trout, president of Trout & Partners in Greenwich, Conn.

P&G spent more than $200 million and 25 years researching and produc-ing olestra. It says the synthetic chemical made from sugar and vegetable oil gives people the same gastronomic satisfaction as fat without the calories.

It looks like real fat, but its mole-cules are too large to digest, so it passes through the body unabsorbed.

Consumers are watching.
Some Carnegie-Mellon University graduate students have created a site on the Internet devoted to haiku about olestra.

"This tastes delicious, but sorry, gotta run. O-lestra is calling," gradu-ate student David Steere wrote.

Mark Thomas, a research engineer at the university, offered this string of verse: "Procter and Gamble/makes olestra and Pampers; odd coinci-dence."

Forgotten Soviet cosmonaut tells his story

Associated Press

MOSCOW — When Yuri Gagarin blasted off to eternal fame in a tiny capsule 35 years ago Friday, the man considered the best Soviet cosmonaut of all was left to watch forlornly on Earth.

Goodbye to immortality, as far as German Titov was concerned. Hello, space trivia.

If not for Gagarin's broad smile and regular-guy appeal, Titov could have made history as the first human to travel in space. Instead, he had to settle for a historical footnote as Gagarin's backup and a later, less momentous flight.

"Naturally I was disappointed," the 60-year-old Titov recalls without bitterness. "Until the last moment, I had hoped to be the one."

The passage of more than half a lifetime and an accomplished career of his own — pioneer cosmonaut, top Soviet space official, member of Russian parliament — have erased all outward traces of regret at what might have been.

Pale blue eyes alight, the gray-haired, stocky Russian conveys with relish the intensity and suspense of the race to beat the Americans into space.

"We were young, we were pilots, and we were hungry to test the new technology of 'space machines,'" he says. "And we all wanted to be first."

Twenty Soviet military pilots were selected to train as cosmonauts at a special base, now known as Star City, outside Moscow in 1960. By the end of the year the group was pared down to six, including Gagarin and Titov.

The competition for the first flight went down to the wire.

Titov, while refusing to state flatly that he was better than the rest, can quote almost by heart from a space official's book that said he was the best-organized, best-trained and strongest-willed.

He got a strong hint he wouldn't be picked when Soviet media visited the training center shortly before the flight.

Attracted by Gagarin's "movie star's face," Titov says, the photographers and reporters swarmed over him and largely ignored the others.

Gagarin also had the right stuff, Soviet-style. His parents were peasants and he left school early to go to work, while Titov was from the intelligentsia — his father was a teacher.

Cesar Solovyov, retired chief rocket engineer and an instructor of the first cosmonauts, explains the official reasoning.

"Titov was more intelligent. He was the most active in training and the most inquisitive. He would even read poems while he was in the training chamber," Solovyov said in an interview.

"There was nothing particularly remarkable about Gagarin. He was a good guy, smart enough, qualified. But most of all, for the flight that would show our space program to the world, he was the most striking, with a smiling, handsome face. It was his place to be first."

The cosmonauts were informed only three days before the April 12, 1961, flight. Titov was stunned. Today, he can smile ironically as he relates official Soviet press accounts that said he was so happy he jumped for joy and hugged and kissed Gagarin.

Planning on Graduate School... Apply for a Fellowship

Attend this informational meeting to get helpful hints from recent recipients and faculty coaches.

Thursday, April 11th
11:00 am 321 MSRB

The Rhodes, Marshall, National Science Foundation, Fulbright and Goldwater awards will be discussed. Students who have previously been awarded these fellowships will be on hand to answer your questions...

Don't count yourself out, come and prepare to apply!!!

McDougal hopes that every BYU student, both in Provo and alumni abroad, will commemorate Y-days by performing an act of service this week to honor BYU.

"As long as they're (students) doing service, we don't care whether they participate in one of the organized Y-days services or in their own service."

McDougal will join President Bateman at the dedication ceremony where he plans to speak on ways students can light the "Y" with their lives. Dean of Student Life Maren Mouritsen will also be speaking.

Following the unveiling of the large plaque, students and leaders will then proceed to the "Y" where they will unveil the smaller, photographic plaque. Light refreshments and beverages will be provided at the "Y".

Students who would like a ride to the "Y" trailhead can meet at the Morris and Cannon centers at 5:30 p.m.
